ABSTRACT

This document provides a description of the process employed to map the Nine-County San Francisco Bay Area Region's major minority populations, the social service agencies, and special interest groups which serve these populations.

The rationale for selecting the major minority groups is discussed, as are the data sources employed to locate these groups. Appended to the report are minority population data by Metropolitan Transportation Commission's planning zones. Accompanying this document as a second volume is an extensive bibliography on the region's minority population. The appendices also include a detailed listing of the social service agencies and minority oriented organizations by group served. The data contained in this report are basic to the population projection and minority transit needs assessment which are the focus of the project's second phase.

The contents of this report reflect the views of the author who is responsible for the facts and the accuracy of the data presented herein. The contents do not necessarily reflect the official views or policies of the Federal Highway Administration or the California Department of Transportation. I. INTRODUCTION

The Metropolitan Transportation Commission

The Metropolitan Transportation Commission (MTC) was created by the California Legislature on September 14, 1970, when it became evident that a cohesive, well-coordinated transportation plan was required for the burgeoning San Francisco Bay Area. The responsibilities with which MTC is essentially charged are:

- To prepare, periodically update and implement a a Regional Transportation Plan (RTP) that best serves the present and future transportation requirements of the nine-county Region with its nearly five million people;
- To act as the central review agency for all Bay Area agencies seeking transportation funding from the State or Federal governments; and
- To monitor the effectiveness and performance of the Bay Area's transit operators.

MTC recognizes the need for minority involvement in the regional transportation planning process. As stated in MTC's Regional Transportation Plan:

> "The Commission understands that opportunity for all persons in the region to participate in the full range of human activities may often be denied by insufficient transportation. It therefore intends that the Regional Transportation Plan shall support equal opportunity for all residents to have access to jobs, social services, recreational activities and other purposes of travel. The Commission further desires that the decision process be responsible to public values and provide for the continuing involvement of the public in the preparation, maintenance, revision, and use of the Plan. The Commission intends that decisions about resource allocation, and other means of implementing the Plan, will be based upon an evaluation process that brings to bear and interrelates all information relevant to the making of transportation policy decisions. The Commission also aims to recognize the local interests of communities in the region, and the objectives of State-wide transportation policy and National transportation goals."

The Minority Citizens Advisory Committee

In keeping with the goal of maximum input from minorities into the regional transportation planning process, the Metropolitan Transportation Commission announced the formulation of the MTC Minority Citizens Advisory Committee (MCAC) on January 13, 1975. On March 26, 1975, members were officially appointed to the MCAC. The selection process for MCAC members consists of screening of applicants from each county by the MTC Commissioner from that county. The MTC Commissioners, after selecting the most qualified applicants, then make their recommendations to MTC. Members of the MCAC are selected on a proportionate basis, with the more densely-populated counties having a greater number of members appointed to the MCAC. The composition of the MCAC consists of 24 members: 11 Spanish, 7 Black, and 5 Asian, as well as one special member-at-large, appointed to serve at the pleasure of the Commission. Members are appointed for a term of two years, and may serve no more than two consecutive terms.

The stated goals of the MCAC are:

- To assist the Metropolitan Transportation Commission in the development of minority participation in planning and the reviewing of MTC goals.

- To assist the Metropolitan Transportation Commission in the detailed exploration of minority interests or issues, and develop alternative solutions to transportation problems facing minority citizens.

- To assist the Metropolitan Transportation Commission in the formulation and review of the MTC Affirmative Action Plan Goals and Timetables.

- To assist the Metropolitan Transportation Commission in the development of procedures for identifying, contacting, and interacting with the various minority communities for participation at the regional level.

At one of its first meetings the MCAC, with MTC Commissioners, the Executive Director, and key staff discussed the need for more data on residential locations of minority persons living in the Bay Area, their numbers and their transportation needs. Subsequently, the MCAC recommended that a Request for Proposal (RFP) be issued to initiate what would become known as the Minority Transportation Needs Assessment Project.

The Minority Transportation Needs Assessment Project

The Minority Transportation Needs Assessment Project (MTNAP) is intended to identify residential locations and assess the unique transportation needs of ethnic minority groups in the Nine-County San Francisco Bay Area Region* (the counties of Alameda, Contra Costa, Marin, Napa, San Francisco, San Mateo, Santa Clara, Solano and Sonoma). Using this information as a base, the MCAC will then make their recommendations in a form useful to public officials, citizens, and planning professionals. The MTNAProject attempts to answer four basic questions:

- What are the minority population and special interest groups in the San Francisco Bay Area Region?
- Where are the groups, organizations and agencies located?
- What are the unique transportation needs of these minority groups?
- How can these minority transportation needs be considered more extensively in the planning process?

Of these questions, only the first two are focused upon in this Phase I report.

The MTNAProject began in January of 1977 and comprises two major phases to assess minority transportation needs in the nine counties which comprise the San Francisco Bay Area. A special MTNAP task force of nine members of the MCAC (one from each county) was appointed for the purpose of working with the contractor in executing the work tasks specified in the MTNAP scope of work.

Phase I of the MTNAProject is concerned with the identification and mapping of the primary ethnic minority populations, the community based and social service agencies (SSA) with transportation-related activities or which provide services primarily to minorities, and other special interest groups (SIG). The Phase I Final Report supplements a series of nine (9) county base maps as well as overlays (dot maps) for each of the five minority groups being considered. Also included are overlays indicating the location of social service agencies and minority special interest group organizations.

In this report, primary attention is given to the procedure followed in developing the maps. After the Introduction, there is a discussion of the rationale employed in identifying and selecting the Region's major minority groups. Comments on data sources used is the content of the next section, which is Section III. Section IV centers on the procedure employed to locate and plot the Region's minority residential patterns. Map scale selection and dot size (value) is also discussed in this section. A discussion of the procedure employed to identify and locate social service agencies with minority orientation is the emphasis of Section V. The concluding section focuses upon a discussion of the maps produced and how these products relate to other phases of the project.

*Also referred to throughout this report as the Nine-County Bay Area Region, the San Francisco Bay Area, and the Region.

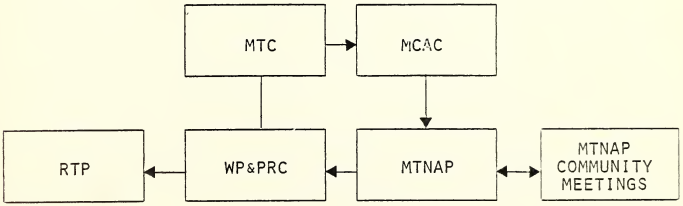
With the location and mapping accomplished in Phase I, Phase II of the MTNAProject will ascertain and document the actual and perceived transportation needs of the Region's minority groups, considering transit dependence, automobile ownership, language barriers, special work schedules, and centers of employment. Our approach to the needs assessment uses the community meeting setting as the mechanism for data collection. Meetings are being held weekly over a period of 28 weeks in different communities within the nine counties. At these meetings, discussions will center around the particular needs and transportation concerns unique to the communities in focus. The information provided will become part of a final report to the Metropolitan Transportation Commission to be submitted in July of 1978, at the conclusion of Phase II and of the MTNAProject.

The MTNAProject is seen as an integral part of the Regional Transportation Plan (RTP). This relationship of MTNAP to the Regional Transportation Plan is graphically illustrated below. This flow diagram shows the MTNAP as emanating from the MCAC with its findings and recommendations submitted to the Work Program and Planning Revision Committee (WP&PRC). These findings and recommendations which are submitted to the WP&PRC are seen as providing the basis for an equitable allocation of transit services to minorities in the RTP.



The MTNAProject will result in a technical report which will provide the data base necessary to enable the MCAC to make its recommendations to the Metropolitan Transportation Commission. The Commission will then consider what changes it should make in the Regional Transportation Plan to reflect the recommendations made by the MCAC. This document will provide the MCAC and the MTC with increased knowledge of the particular transportation needs and concerns of minorities. This knowledge, once available, can be integrated into the planning process and can help the Region's transit system achieve its goal of providing equal transit opportunities for all citizens.

II. IDENTIFICATION OF MINORITY GROUPS

There are many minority groups represented in the Nine-County Bay Area Region. Among these are three major minority groups: Spanish heritage, Black, and Asian, which can conveniently be divided into three sub-groups: Chinese, Japanese, and Filipino. For purposes of this Project, five major minority groups were selected while fully acknowledging that many more minority groups are represented in the Region. These groups are:

1) Spanish heritage,

2) Black,

3) Chinese,

4) Japanese, and

5) Filipino.

Several factors were considered as selection criteria for determining the five groups central to this part of the Minority Transportation Needs Assessment Project. These criteria include the size of the group. The five groups selected are the five largest found in the Region. They are represented in all nine counties and regionally they represent at least one percent of the total population (Table 1).

Many of the groups not specifically addressed were excluded on the criterion of size. For example, Vietnamese, Samoans, Portuguese, Koreans, Hawaiians, and Native Americans are minorities found in the Nine-County Bay Area Region that were not included in this study because they did not satisfy the size criterion (Table 1). However, many of these smaller minority groups are closely associated with the five minority groups considered in this report and share the same areas and neighborhoods. Koreans, Vietnamese, Samoans, and Hawaiians are for the most part interspersed and are found within the neighborhoods of the three largest Asian groups (Chinese, Japanese and Filipino) being considered. A large share of the Portuguese population residing in the Nine-County Bay Area Region tends to be located in Southern Alameda County in the cities of San Leandro, San Lorenzo, Hayward and Castro Valley. Many of these families are also implicitly represented in the "persons of Spanish mother tongue" category included in the Spanish heritage minority classification. Therefore, these minority groups have a high probability of being represented at the County Minority Transportation Needs Assessment Meetings, as will the five primary minority groups.

Another criterion considered in the selection process is the availability of data. It is obvious that minority groups that are small in number present data gathering problems, because detailed statistics on these groups are not generally found recorded in the population censuses and other easily accessible public records. Therefore, groups were selected which are represented in most public records and which can easily be identified and utilized to establish their residential location.

The third selection criterion considered is the settlement history of the groups. The Spanish heritage, Chinese, Japanese, and Black groups are long-time residents of the San Francisco Bay Region. Of the groups selected, Filipinos were included, not because of their long history of settlement, but primarily due to the size criterion. For a group to be included, it must qualify in at least two of the stated criteria (Table 2).

Each of the minority groups selected for this study follows the definitions established by the U.S. Bureau of the Census. In this study, Black is substituted for the category reported in the census as Negro. Spanish heritage, on the other hand, is a more inclusive category; it includes all persons reported in the census under the following categories: Persons of Spanish language, other persons of Spanish surname, persons of Spanish mother tongue, and persons of Puerto Rican birth or parentage. This inclusive category is used throughout the study, rather than the more limited definitions of Spanish surname, which does not appear in the census records prior to 1970.

III. DATA SOURCES

The basic data employed to identify and determine the distribution of minorities (Spanish heritage, Black, Chinese, Japanese, and Filipino) in the Nine-County Bay Area Region is drawn mainly from the 1970 Census of Population, Census Tract Statistics. These data are supplemented with data on minority distribution available through the Metropolitan Transportation Commission's population print-outs, based on the fourth count of the U.S. Census of Population (1970). In order to improve on the accuracy of the data, information from various planning agencies was also used (Appendix A).

In addition, a rigorous search of the literature on minority populations was conducted in order to determine the history of the minority groups being considered. During this search an effort was made to identify studies which deal with spatial patterns of minority residential locations in the region. This bibliography is available under seperate cover, as a second volume of the Phase I MTNAP Final Report.

To further improve the data in order to identify and locate the region's minorities, a concerted effort was made to contact leaders of the various minority communities in order to draw upon their experience, which is vital in identifying small minority population clusters. Central among those consulted on minority locations in the region were the members of the Minority Citizens Advisory Committee, who were asked to develop the cognitive mapping of minority locations.

IV. LOCATING AND MAPPING MINORITIES

Census data reveals the number of minorities residing in the Nine-County Bay Area Region. The process of locating the various minority groups in order to reveal the degree to which they cluster is a complex process. To accomplish this task, it is necessary to initially use census tract data which provides information which shows the spatial variation of the various minority patterns at a scale which is less than that of a county but is still rather generalized. To refine minority locations at a more sensitive scale that would account for the spatial variations within the census tract, it is necessary to use block statistics which are available from the U.S. Bureau of Housing. Blocks are sub-divisions of the census tracts which provide information on the percentage of non-white population. These data, when translated, provide information that will allow non-white areas to be delineated from the rest of the population and also show the variations in settlements found within a census tract. The data are very useful but the coverage is not complete for the entire Nine-County Region. Housing block statistics only cover the urbanized areas, not the entire standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas which comprise the region.

The various population distribution data provided by city and county planning agencies also allows for the minority patterns to be further refined. Of particular utility are the various county censuses (circa 1975) which, in some cases (for example, Solano County) provide minority population data for county enumeration districts which allows for the specific identification and location of minority residential patterns in the county. Within the general minority population parameters resulting from the use of block statistics and other data sources, the detailed mapping of minority locations is pursued.

Although the choropleth mapping is widely employed in planning documents to report population distribution, much information is lost by its use since it is assumed that the data shown is distributed evenly over the area of each quadrant (census tract) appearing on the map. However, there is usually considerable variation within a single unit in the population's distribution pattern, the knowledge of which is essential to an effective planning process. When using choropleth maps, streets, parks, industrial, commercial and institutional land uses, as well as the area devoted to residential use (the actual area where the population is located) are not accounted for. Neither does choropleth mapping account for the effect of topography which does not readily accomodate residential population: steep slopes, swamps, dense forest, and water features (bays, lakes, streams, etc.). Choropleth mapping does not account for the degree that these natural features and non-residential land uses affect the internal distribution of population.

The population dot map is a superior alternative to choropleth mapping as a means to document the distribution of a population and is used in this study. By using the population dot map, a more objective and accurate distribution of population can be realized. Population dot maps have characteristics which permit the viewer to determine with ease:

- the numerical value of a single dot,
- the total value of the population's distribution,
- the total number of dots,
- the distribution of dots, and
- the shape and pattern of the distribution.

Additionally, when using population dot maps:

- the differences between parts of the distribution and the total distribution can be compared,
- the approximate density of the distribution per unit of measure can be calculated, and
- the percentage of parts of the distribution can be calculated when the total number of dots is known.

These dot map characteristics are far superior to and exceed those of the choropleth map in terms of the dimensions offered and its utility for planning.

Population dot maps are also particularly useful when dealing with small sub-population (minority) groups whose distributions can be totally obscured on choropleth maps.

To determine more precisely the locational patterns of the region's various minority groups requires that multiple data sources be utilized. Again, these data include census tract data which provide specific numerical information on race and ethnicity (including foreign stock) which allows for the region's various minority groups to be located individually. Census tracts are units which contain blocks and must be used to identify the size of the respective minority groups, and in conjunction with block statistics, to establish each minority group's generalized distributional pattern. This step is necessary since block statistics only stratify population by percentage of white and non-white. Block statistics do not provide data on specific minority groups. However, it is possible to locate the respective minority populations within the non-white general population parameter.

To improve the precision in locating respective minority groups requires that historical documents be employed when available. Historical information on minority location is a particularly valuable contribution to increasing the accuracy in locating minority populations which are widely dispersed or distributed in small clusters. Interviews with persons knowledgeable of minority communities were also conducted. Their contributions will increase the accuracy of minority group locations.

To further improve the accuracy of locating minority populations by accounting for the impact of natural features and non-residential land uses on these distributional patterns, aerial photographs, U.S. Geological Survey Topographical sheets, and land use information were used.

Since dot maps are to be used in order to display the region's minority distribution, it is necessary to determine the map scale in light of the maps' purpose. The maps are to be used as data bases for the planning process, so a scale has to be selected that is useful. The 1:62,500 Metropolitan Transit System's county base map series is the scale used. Therefore, the dot maps produced are compatible with the Metropolitan Transportation Commission's map series.

After experimentation with census tracts that have the largest population and several rural tracts with few people, a dot size of 50 persons was established. This dot size accommodates the high density and low density tracts without significant loss of information.

In the case of the San Mateo/San Francisco maps, the minority populations plotted in San Francisco County are generalized and should not be used for direct calculation. To accommodate this problem, inherent in accurately mapping a large population in a small area, San Francisco is enlarged to a 1:1,200 scale.

A mylar base map is produced for each county sheet at a 40% standard screen so that sufficient topography and other detail are maintained and will not obscure the data to be overlaid. For each minority group mapped, an overlay on stabilene is produced and color coded by the group represented (Table 3).

In addition, two overlays are available to show the planning zone boundaries and census tract boundaries. The overlay with the planning zone boundaries is screened on clear mylar at 40% (heavy density) and the census tract boundary overlay is on clear mylar with a line density of 100%. Presentation in this manner allows the distribution to be easily compared. In choosing colors to represent the five minority groups, primary consideration was given to choosing those colors which would best retain their intensity in the reproduction process. The final choice of the five colors used was made after consultation with the Metropolitan Transportation Commission's Cartographic Department. Those colors are indicated in Table 3.

Data supportive of these minority population dot maps are aggregated by the Metropolitan Transportation Commission planning zones and are listed in Appendix B.

The existing transit systems in each category are represented on a set of county overlays to the base maps, prepared by the Metropolitan Transportation Commission's Cartographic Department. The transit service mapped by category is based on information contained in the 1976 Regional Transit Directory published by the Metropolitan Transportation Commission. The actual transit lines and routes appear on the overlays by type of transit service available. The transit service categories include:

1) Local bus, jitney, trolley,

2) Express bus,

3) Demand activated bus,

4) Rail service, and

5) Ferry service.

All the maps accompanying this report are found in Table 4, where each "X" on the table represents a map or overlay.

Mapping Procedure

Multiple procedures and data sources are employed to map the minority groups selected for the MTNAProject. Census block statistics do not provide all the data necessary to map minority populations in detail. Block statistics only provide detailed locations for the "non-white" category, and do not provide full coverage of the region. The coverage is limited to that of the urbanized area contiguous to the central cities of the respective Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas included in the region.

Six examples are used to illustrate the complex procedures employed to map minorities. The areas selected for this purpose and a representative census tract within each area are:

1) Alviso - census tract 5046.02,

2) Solano County - all tracts,

3) Sonoma County - all tracts,

4) Chinatown - census tract 107,

5) Brookfield Village - census tract 4091, and

6) The Mission District - census tract 208.

Alviso is a small, predominantly Spanish-heritage population settlement in Santa Clara County which is partially covered by census tract 5046.02. To locate this population, in addition to the census data which reports the number of Spanish-heritage population found in the area (the basis for determining the representative number of dots), it is necessary to use the 1:24,000 U.S. Geological Survey 7½ minute quadrangle to place the dots. The quadrangle clearly shows that the majority of the area in the census tract is swamp or marsh land and salt evaporators, with only small areas where settlement occurs. At this scale the built area shows the street pattern as well as the number of residential structures. With this detail and the knowledge that of the 1,680 inhabitants, 99% are of Spanish heritage and the remaining 1% are Filipino, then the dots can be placed so that the Spanish-heritage settlement pattern is accurately represented. In this instance the Alviso settlement pattern was field verified.

Solano County is a low density rural area that has relatively large census tracts, making it difficult to accurately locate the population. The general population pattern can be determined by using the U.S. Geological Survey 7½ and 15 minute quadrangles as the basis for dot placement. However this would not satisfy the requirements with which this study is concerned, which is to accurately place dots representing the minorities. By using census tract data and appropriate U.S. Geological Survey quadrangles in conjunction with the Solano County 1975 Census (Block Groups), it is possible to accurately map the five minority groups. The 1970 Census Tract Data provides the proper population numbers. The quadrangles provide the basis for dot placement, and the 1975 Census Block Groups information provides data that allows for minority settlement patterns for 1975 to be determined while specifically locating the major minority concentrations within each census tract. In combination, these sources allow for dot maps to be developed for the respective Spanish heritage, Black, Chinese, Japanese and Filipino populations. Several of the areas, specifically the Black settlement areas, were field verified. The Spanish-heritage settlement was verified by cognitive mapping.

Sonoma County has a county census for 1975, but data on minority populations is not available by units smaller than census tract. The U.S. Geological Survey quadrangles and census tract data were used for dot placements, depending heavily upon cognitive maps of minority locations for Sonoma County. In addition, the Annual Racial and Ethnic Survey of the Public Schools for Sonoma County was consulted.

Chinatown is a high density Chinese population area located in San Francisco. Census tract 107, one of several that collectively comprise Chinatown, has 4,234 Chinese, which is 76% of the tract's population. In order to place the dots in the tract so they represent the Chinese residential patterns, several data sources are utilized. Census tract data is used to determine the number of Chinese residents and block statistics are used to identify the non-white population distribution. The non-white distribution pattern revealed by this process is reflective of the Chinese distribution, since Chinese account for 88% of the non-white population found in the tract. To refine the placement of dots, quadrangle maps are used which delineate the land use pattern. In this instance, cognitive information was used to verify Chinese location along with field observations.

Brookfield Village is an area in east Oakland which has a Black population of 2,479, which is 94% of the tract's total population. In this case, non-white block statistics were used as the primary data sources, along with the appropriate U.S. Geological survey quadrangle for dot placement. Cognitive information and field observations were used to verify the settlement patterns.

The Mission District is a densely populated area where the Spanish-heritage population dominates. For example, tract 208 has a total population of 5,367, of which 90% are of Spanish heritage. (Spanish-heritage populations, for the most part, are not classified as non-white in the Census, thereby rendering non-white block statistics useful only in determining the absence of this population segment in certain areas.) By looking at the residual area along with the land use data available on the quadrangle maps, dot placement can be achieved. It is also important to use cognitive information and field observation to verify this group's residential patterns.

The following examples of the dot maps produced focus on San Francisco. A map for each major minority group found in the Region is included.

V. MINORITY RESIDENTIAL AREAS

Early Minority Settlements

Central southern and southwestern Pomos, Wappo of the Yuki Nation, Valley Patwin and Hill Patwin of the Wintun Nation, the Costanoan Nation's Saklan, San Francisco, Santa Clara and Santa Cruz tribes and the Coast and Lake tribes of the Miwok Nation were the primary Native American inhabitants of the San Francisco Bay Region. These indigenous nations and their respective tribes were well established in the region before the first Spanish settlers appeared.

The first Spaniards in the region established the St. Francis of Assisi Mission in 1776 which was later changed to Mission Delores. The Mission was located in what is now San Francisco's Mission District, and to this day it is a center of Spanish-heritage population and culture.

During the period 1850-1870, Chinese (predominantly from the Canton Province) arrived in the Bay Area. Many of these early Chinese worked as laborers on the Union Pacific and Central Pacific railroads. Upon reaching this area, the Chinese settled in what is now San Francisco's Chinatown, the North Beach Area and the China Basin. As many as 25,000 Chinese arrived during this period.

Following the Chinese, the Japanese were the next major minority group to migrate to the area in significant numbers. There were three waves of migration starting with the Isei (1890-1924), followed by the Nisei (1924-1941) and continuing with the Sansui (1941 to present). The Japanese for the most part settled initially in San Francisco.

Blacks have resided in the Nine-County Bay Area Region in small numbers since the middle of the 1800's. However, it was not until 1940 that significant numbers arrived to seek employment in the war industries, particularly the shipbuilding industry. The heaviest settlement was in West Oakland with a smaller cluster settling in the Hunters Point area of San Francisco. Prior to 1940 Blacks were employed primarily in service occupations such as the pullman service.

Last among the Region's major minority groups to arrive were the Filipinos. Starting with migration to Hawaii in 1906, Filipinos began arriving in the area as early as 1923. Recently Filipinos have taken advantage of the 1925 legislation that grants them dual citizenship, and significant numbers have settled in the Region. Some believe that Filipinos will be the largest Asian group in the region by 1980 if the current migration trend continues.

Contemporary Residential Patterns

According to the 1970 Census, the Nine-County Bay Area Region has a total population of 4,642,588. Nearly 62% of this population is found in three counties (Alameda, Santa Clara and San Francisco). The four smallest counties (Napa, Solano, Marin and Sonoma) account for only 14% of the total population (Table 5). The Region's population is not evenly distributed among counties, but is concentrated in those counties that ring the Bay, starting at the "Golden Gate" and proceeding in a counter-clockwise direction from south to east, terminating at the Sacramento River. A boundary formed by drawing a line from the "Golden Gate" to the mouth of the Sacramento River and eastward down its center divides the Region into a group of Northern Counties (Marin, Napa, Solano and Sonoma), which are sparsely populated, mainly rural areas, and a group of heavily populated counties on the Bay side (Alameda, Contra Costa, San Francisco, San Mateo and Santa Clara).

The minority population of the Nine-County San Francisco Bay Area Region is also distributed unevenly. Of the 1,478,329 minorities residing in the Region (three out of every seven residents are classified as minority) Alameda County has the largest minority population, followed by Santa Clara and San Francisco. Again it is found that the total minority population is concentrated in the southern group of counties, as is the case with the total population (Table 6).

When viewing the regional distribution of the total minority population, Alameda (27.7%), San Francisco (24.4%) and Santa Clara (21.6%) account for 74% of all minorities within their collective boundaries (Table 6). However, when looking at the proportion of the total minority population residing in a county, San Francisco has a ratio of minority to total population of 1:1, while 52.3% of the county's population is classified as minority. San Francisco is followed by Alameda with a ratio of 2:3 and Santa Clara, with a 3:7 ratio. The ratio of Santa Clara is identical to that of Solano County, since in both counties 30% of the population is minority (Table 7). With the exception of Solano County, the counties with the largest proportion of minority population are found among the southern counties, with the northern counties having the smallest minority proportion. This indicates that not only do the southern counties have significantly larger minority populations, but the proportion of minorities in these county populations is also greater (Table 7).

Within the Region there are 124 minority population clusters. The southern counties have 81 minority areas identified, compared to 43 found in the northern counties. The total number of minority clusters in the southern counties (where most of the minority population is located) are greater than in the northern counties (with the exception of Solano County, where 20 small clusters are located). Table 8 also reveals that slightly over half of the total clusters (65) are Spanish-heritage concentrations. Nearly 30 of the clusters are Black populated areas and there are approximately 10 clusters each for Chinese, Japanese and Filipino populations.

To gain a more detailed view of how these clusters are distributed in the region and how their pattern varies within each county, it is necessary to discuss the location of these residential clusters for each of the minority groups. This is accomplished by using information found in the tables and the maps showing the locations of the respective minority group residential areas.

Spanish-heritage Residential Areas

Regionally, the Spanish-heritage population group accounts for 18.7% of the population. It is the largest minority group and makes up nearly three-fifths of the region's total minority population. This group is found in all counties. Regionally, Santa Clara ranks first with a Spanish-heritage population of 262,049 which accounts for approximately 30% of the 866,326 Spanish-heritage population residing in the San Francisco Bay Area. Alameda, San Francisco and San Mateo Counties are respectively ranked next largest in terms of Spanish-heritage population. Napa has a Spanish-heritage population of 7,664, ranking it last in size. Although the Spanish-heritage group's residential center is in Santa Clara and is more concentrated in the other southern Counties as a group, it is regionally distributed more widely than any of the other minority distributions being considered (Table 9).

There are 65 Spanish-heritage population clusters identified in the Nine-County Bay Area Region (Map 1). Alameda's Spanish-heritage population of 196,824 is found in eleven major clusters. They are Alameda, Fruitvale, and the Kennedy Tract in the City of Oakland; and located in the East Bay south along California Route 17 are two concentrations in San Leandro (East and West), and one each in San Lorenzo, Hayward, Union City (Decoto), Newark, Irvington, and Fremont.

Nearly 79,000 of the Spanish-heritage population reside in Contra Costa County. This population is clustered in Rodeo, San Pablo-Richmond Annex, Hercules and Crockett, all of which are located along the Bay to the north. Martinez, West Pittsburg, Antioch, Brentwood and Oakley are the other clusters found in the north easterly reaches of the county.

San Francisco and San Mateo Counties comprise 29.4% of the Region's Spanish-heritage population, concentrated in ten major clusters. The clusters with the largest Spanish-heritage population are, respectively, the Inner and Outer Mission Districts in San Francisco and the Redwood City area in San Mateo County. Other areas of clustering found in San Francisco County are the South of Market District and Bay View. Daly City (East and West), South San Francisco, Linda Mar and the City of San Mateo are the other Spanish-heritage concentrations in San Mateo County.

Santa Clara County has the largest Spanish-heritage population (262,049). Eight predominately Spanish-heritage clusters are located within the County. Four of these (Sunnyvale, the City of Santa Clara, East San Jose and the Berryessa District) are dense urban concentrations. Alviso, Edonvale-South San Jose, Morgan Hill and Gilroy are less dense areas with much smaller populations.

In the Southern Bay Counties, 91.4% of the Region's Spanish-heritage population is residentially centered around 38 major clusters, whereas the remainder of the region's Spanish-heritage population in the northern counties are distributed among 27 clusters which are more dispersed and much smaller in size. Part of this dispersion is due to the fact that the northern counties tend to be dominated by agricultural activities in contrast to the industrial South Bay counties.

Black Residential Areas

Ninety-three percent of the Region's Black population resides in the five southern counties, where 19 major Black residential clusters are found which have an average population of approximately 18,000 residents. The largest Black population, comprising 44% of the Region's total, is found in Alameda County, with a total Black population of 161,340 (Table 10). Alameda's Black population is clustered in West Berkeley-Emeryville, and the contiguous North and West Oakland areas. Fruitvale, East Oakland and Brookfield Village-Sobrent Park are the remaining concentrations in Alameda County (Map 2).

Although San Francisco's four clusters are smaller in size on the average, they are better known. Blacks in San Francisco are largely concentrated in the Fillmore-Western Addition District and at Hunters Point. Ingleside on the City/County southern border and the Potrero District are other areas with significant Black population clusters.

In San Mateo County the major Black area in terms of popula- population size is East Palo Alto, which is often referred to locally as "Nairobi." Other than Nairobi there are two other concentrations in the county, one at Foster City and the second in Redwood City.

There are only 18,128 Blacks located in Santa Clara County and the majority are clustered in the vicinity of Berryessa in Southeast San Jose.

Slightly more than 93% of the Region's Blacks are found in the southern counties. The remaining 6.6%, 23,969, are located in the northern counties. Napa has no Black clusters; the other three counties have a total of ten. In Marin County Blacks are concentrated in Marin City just west of U.S. Route 101. There is also a small concentration at Hamilton Air Force Base. The total number of Blacks in the county is just less than 5,000.

Solano County has 16,520 Blacks, the largest number found in the northern counties. There are six concentrations in Solano County, four of which are located in Vallejo (West, Central, and Southeast Vallejo and the Country Club Crest-Parkview Terrace-Sears Point Road areas.) Suisun City, Fairfield and Travis Air Force Base are the other concentrations which are east of Vallejo on Interstate 80. Sonoma County's two Black areas are Southeast Santa Rosa and Santa Rosa Air Force Base. Together these clusters account for nearly all of the county's 1,978 Blacks.

Chinese Residential Areas

Sixty percent of all the Chinese living in the Nine-County Bay Area Region are located in San Francisco, with the largest number concentrated in Chinatown and a smaller number residing in the Richmond-Sunset District (Table 11 and Map 3). The next largest number is located in Alameda County, where 19,506 Chinese represent a single cluster, in Oakland's Chinatown near the Fruitvale Border. The three remaining counties that comprise the southern set (Contra Costa, San Mateo and Santa Clara) each have Chinese populations that do not exceed 8,000. Each of these counties has a single cluster. They are, in order, El Cerrito Hills, the City of San Mateo, and Chinatown in East San Jose.

Only 2,478 Chinese are found in the four northern counties. There is one cluster in Marin which is North San Rafael and another, North Fairfield which is located in Solano County.

There are only eight Chinese population clusters in the entire region with the major centers of Chinese population found in San Francisco and Oakland respectively, where nearly 81% of the Region's Chinese reside.

Japanese Residential Areas

Santa Clara County, with a Japanese population of 16,227 comprises the largest percentage (31.2) of Japanese residents in the Region. The Japanese population for Santa Clara County is found in two clusters, Mountain View and Japantown (San Jose). The 12,364 Japanese residing in San Francisco are also clustered in two areas, Japantown and the Richmond-Sunset District. Alameda County's single cluster is the West Berkeley District, where 20.2% of the region's Japanese reside. In Contra Costa, Japanese are clustered in the El Cerrito-Richmond Annex area and San Mateo County has only one Japanese population cluster, in San Mateo City. All together, 93.6% of the Region's Japanese (48,702) are found in the Southern Counties.

North of the Bay there are two small Japanese clusters in Marin County. These are Tamalpais Valley and Mill Valley, with a combined Japanese population of just over 1,000. No major clusters are found in Napa or Sonoma Counties. Solano, on the other hand, has one small cluster centered in Northeast Fairfield, where approximately 1,000 Japanese reside (Table 12 and Map 4).

Filipino Residential Areas

Ninety-two percent of the Filipino population in the Region is located in the southern counties. San Francisco has a Filipino population of 25,060, located in four clusters. The major clusters are the western and southern portions of the Inner Mission District. Smaller concentrations are located in the Outer Mission District and the South of Market District. Alameda County has a Filipino population of nearly 10,000, concentrated in the City of Alameda. Santa Clara County has a Filipino population of 6,768, located in Sunnyvale and South San Jose. San Mateo County has a Filipino population of nearly 6,000, clustered in the three areas of Daly City South, Daly City East and Pacifica.

There are only 4,238 Filipinos in the northern four counties, and only one cluster appears: Hamilton Air Force Base, in Marin County (Table 13, and Map 5).

Native American, Hawaiian and Other Minority Populations

Due to the lack of detailed data, Native American, Hawaiian and the category "other minority population" was not mapped and no clusters of these populations can be reported. However, it is possible to discuss how these populations are distributed among the Nine-County Bay Area Region.

Native Americans represent only four-tenths of one percent of the Region's total population. Eighty-two percent of the Region's 18,945 Native Americans reside in the southern urbanized counties with the largest number, 5,688, living in Alameda County. Santa Clara has the second largest Native American population, with a population of 21.4% of the total Native American population in the Region. San Francisco's 2,900 Native Americans ranks it third Regionally, followed by Contra Costa with a Native American population of 1,701. Of the southern counties, San Mateo has the smallest number of Native Americans and is ranked sixth.

In the counties North of the Bay there are slightly over 3,000 Native Americans. Sonoma County has a Native American population of 1,623, with Napa and Marin Counties each having a Native American population of less than 500 (Table 14).

Hawaiians make up the Region's smallest minority group for which county data is available. This group represents only one-tenth of one percent of the Region's total population. More Hawaiians are found in Alameda County than any of the other counties, with a population of 1,487 (the Hawaiian population for the entire Region is 5,415). All of the other counties in the south each have less than 1,000 Hawaiians. Only 844 Hawaiians reside in the northern four counties. Solano has the largest number with 377 and Napa has a Hawaiian population of 60, ranking it last among all nine counties in numbers of Hawaiian inhabitants (Table 15).

Other Minorities is the category which includes all minorities other than those specifically identified in this report. This category numbers about 20,000, with 90% of the other minority population found in the southern counties. San Francisco ranks first and has more than one-fourth of of the other minority population (5,199) within its boundaries. Alameda and Santa Clara Counties are ranked next respectively and are followed by San Mateo County with Contra Costa County ranked sixth.

The northern counties collectively have less than 2,000 persons classified as other minorities. Solano County has the largest population and Napa is ranked last both in the northern counties and Regionally (Table 16).

VI. IDENTIFICATION OF MINORITY ORIENTED SERVICE AGENCIES AND ORGANIZATIONS

The identification of minority oriented social service agencies and special interest groups in the Nine-County Bay Area Region is based on the assertion that these agencies or groups provide necessary services to the minority community. If this assertion is valid, it can be further inferred that regional transportation systems can ease minority accessibility to these agencies by providing the necessary transit services, once individuals within these systems are made aware of these needs. The evaluation of the transit system efforts in this area will not be treated during this phase of the MTNAProject.

In order to provide a comprehensive listing of the relevant social service agencies and special interest organizations which serve minorities, several sources are utilized. The primary source utilized for the identification of these agencies is the Special Needs Program, "Social Service Agency Survey," released by the Metropolitan Transportation Commission in October, 1976. This publication lists agencies and organizations by county but no effort was made to identify agencies by the minority group(s) served. To accomplish this task members of the Minority Citizens Advisory Committee were consulted in order to match the agencies found in this volume with the minority group(s) served. In addition, the MCAC provided new information on agencies not listed. The result of those interviews is a revised and expanded list of social service agencies and special interest group oriented organizations.

Those social service agencies and special interest group organizations selected for mapping were stratified in terms of the minority populations served. The category "total population served" designates those agencies and organizations which provide services that are utilized by the total community. Examples of these agencies are medical facilities and governmental agencies (local, county, state and federal).

All other agencies are stratified by the five minority groups considered in this report in terms of group served. These agencies are coded by symbols on maps by county.

Those social service agencies and special interest group organizations selected from the minority special needs survey are combined with those provided by the Minority Citizens Advisory Committee members, and are listed in detail by county in Appendices E and F. A summary table of these agencies by group served follows (Table 17).

Maps of the social service agencies and group(s) served are also utilized, along with the population maps, in selecting the sites where county meetings are to be held. The purpose of these meetings (one per week over a period of 28 weeks) is to elicit information on minority needs.

Agencies in San Francisco and Santa Clara in several instances serve more than one ethnic group and are therefore counted more than once. This explains the discrepancy between the total of all categories and the actual number of agencies in the County. This factor and the rounding off of percentages also causes the total for some percentages to exceed 100%.

VII. PHASE II: PLANNED ACTIVITIES

The mapped minority residential distributions (overlays), the base map and the respective planning zone and census tract boundary overlays provide detailed data on the Region's minority population. This data base, which is the result of the synthesis of multiple population sources, provides minority residential patterns in dot form, supplemented by tables found in Appendices B, C and D. These data can be effectively incorporated in the planning process because they can easily be employed to deal with accessibility problems, determining the density of neighborhood as a function of transit service needs, and establishment of the relationship between the Region's transit network and minority residential locations.

The dot distribution maps of minority residential locations produced in Phase I of this research effort will provide the foundation for Phase II tasks, namely: 1) An areawide survey of minority transportation needs, and 2) the projection of minority residential locations through 1990.

The Phase II effort will span a twelve month period encompassing both the needs survey and projections. The data provided through these activities will result in a final report, which will graphically illustrate through the use of tables and maps the transportation needs of minorities in the Nine-County San Francisco Bay Area Region.

Needs Survey

The minority population tables found in Appendices B, C and D easily allow for zones of heavy minority concentration to be identified. These data, along with the mapped patterns, will provide a sampling frame which will be utilized to administer the needs survey to be completed in Phase II of the project.

Social service agency data by group served will also enhance the needs survey because minority oriented agencies or interest groups can be specifically identified by planning zone. The information provided by Social Service Agencies regarding their clients will prove useful in establishing the best locations for the community meetings and the individual respondent interviews.

The community meeting setting will be used as a mechanism for data collection. A total of 28 meetings will be held in different communities of the nine counties over a period of 28 weeks (one meeting per week) and will be organized from among a broadly based fund of religious, social, cultural, recreational, commercial and political groups. Information regarding the meetings will be disseminated through the Social Service Agencies and the media, including community and/or ethnic newspapers, radio stations, television and public announcements. At these meetings an indepth questionnaire will be circulated, and the questions asked will help to ascertain the actual and perceived needs of the ethnic minority persons living in specific regions within the nine Bay Area counties. Discussions will center around the particular needs and transportation concerns unique to the communities in focus, taking into consideration transit dependence, automobile ownership, language barriers, special work schedules, and centers of employment.

The next stage of interviewing will be to follow up the topics raised in the community group meetings with indepth interviews. These interviews will be conducted among a random sample of participants from the community meetings, selected so as to represent the widest possible range of individuals within the communities in focus. Indepth interviews will be conducted by professional survey personnel on a one-to-one basis with respondents. The content of the indepth interviews will be based upon the major topics raised in the community meetings and during interviews with Social Service Agency personnel. However, the individual interviews will be sufficiently flexible and will depend in part upon the number of persons attending the community meetings in each county, as well as on the proportional distribution of the various ethnic groups as determined by the data collection and mapping effect.

The next step will be the analysis and interpretation of the data gathered through the community meetings and individual interviews. This data will be used as the basis for the final report of the MTNAProject, which will illustrate through tables and maps the transportation needs of minority citizens in the Nine-County San Francisco Bay Area.

Spatial Projections and Mapping of Minorities Through 1990

Methods and Techniques

To aid in the long range planning for the transportation needs of the groups in focus, it is necessary to derive extrapolated settlement patterns for minorities through 1990. In order to project future minority residential patterns in a metropolitan area, several factors have to be addressed:

1) The size and shape of the pattern needs to be determined.

2) Significant variations in the topography over which the residential pattern is to expand needs to be considered.

3) The relationship between the minority residential pattern and the topography has to be established.

4) The rate and direction of change in the minority residential pattern has to be determined.

These primary factors are predicated on the assumption that there is a consistent relationship between the change in minority residential pattern and the additional area added to the minority distribution pattern over time.

Proposed Approach

1) Size and Shape of Residential Patterns

To cartographically extrapolate future minority residential patterns, it is necessary to have mapped minority population density boundaries for at least three points in time. Thus, we will map the location of Bay Area minorities in the years 1950 and 1960 and synthesize these with 1970 data. In so doing, the identification, location and mapping procedure described earlier is employed.

2) Classification of the Terrain

It is necessary to classify the terrain over which the minority residential expansion is occuring before prediction can be made. This requires that the terrain be classified into several categories stratified by the degree to which the territory can accept population. Not only is it necessary to consider physical constraints to expansion at this juncture, it is also necessary to investigate prevailing social and economic constraints, and how these modify the area's potential to accept minority population. In addition to this criterion to classify the terrain it is also necessary to apply ecological theory on city structure and growth and its processes of invasion, succession and dominance to facilitate the terrain classification process.

3) The Relationship Between Minority Residential Pattern and Terrain

The relationship between residential pattern and terrain can be determined by observing past and present minority residential density patterns and the relationship of these patterns to terrain classification.

4) Rate and Direction of Change in the Minority Residential Pattern

Rate and direction of change can be determined by measuring the magnitude and direction of expansion by using a time series of minority residential data in terms of density: high (1,500 per square mile), medium (750 per square mile) and low (250 per square mile). Maps of these density patterns provide the data necessary to determine the direction and rate of change.

Projecting Future Minority Expansions: Cartographic Extrapolation

The time series maps previously mentioned show the sequential movement of the boundary line for each density category from past to present. The advance of the boundary line for a density category can then be extrapolated. This can be accomplished according to the following assumptions and procedure. It must be assumed that future expansion will proceed perpendicular to the tangent of the density boundary line at the beginning period being considered. Vectors should be constructed at even intervals along the density boundary line so that the following formula can be utilized:

> b=ak where a and b are vectors and k is the constant. The constant $k = \sqrt{D_2/D_1} * (T_2/T_1)$ where the subscripts 1 and 2 indicate respectively earlier and later periods and D is the ratio of additional square miles per hundred thousand minority population added to the metropolitan minority population for a given period. T is the length of the period in years. D is an expression of areal growth, and its square root is extracted, converting it into an expression of linear growth.

By utilizing this formula for each vector by each density category a series of points are generated. When connected, these points form the future density boundary line for the minority group being considered.

When a vector is projected into a location which will not accept population it is treated as surplus and assigned to the vector nearest to it which is projected in an area where the potential to accept population is highest.

The extrapolation procedure described has been used successfully for Minneapolis-St. Paul and Detroit to determine their respective future settlement patterns.
